2007/10/2

By Tiisetso Motsoeneng

In a mortgage market characterised by poor service and high costs, we believe that the market is crying out for a fresh option.

SA Home Loans founder, Simon Stockley, launched a new home loan provider in a move set to provide competition to the big four banks, it was announced.

"We are aiming to replicate what has happened in many international markets by challenging the status quo with a product that is flexible, very competitive on price and provides customers with a service that is personal, easy and fast," said Stockley.

The new company, Integer, has as its investors, Investec (INP, INL) and Purple Capital (PPE), the listed financial services companies.

"In a mortgage market characterised by poor service and high costs, we believe that the market is crying out for a fresh option," Stockley said.
